1. Troop trains are guarded by the troops themselves and not by the MVD. For example, if a division, even an armored division, is moving, the train will be guarded by the division's troops. This also applies to troops going into an occupied country. If, however, troops are moving into a satellite country, the train is guarded by the troops of the satellite country.
2. Ammunition trains or those trains which carry special equipment or weapons are guarded by the MVD.
